Public invited to view Saturday Operation Sea Dragon activities

The public is invited to watch the Operation Sea Dragon activities on the Presidio of Monterey Saturday.

High Street and Artillery Street gates on the Presidio of Monterey will be closed to through traffic tomorrow from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. All other gates will remain open. Drivers who usually cross the Presidio at High Street or who turn up Artillery Street can cross via Franklin Street or Taylor Street Gate.

Spectators wanting to watch the Sea Dragon activities can enter Franklin or Taylor Street gates to find parking. Activities will begin on Soldier Field 11 - 11:30 a.m. Shuttle service will be available from the parking areas to Stilwell Road and return from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday.

The Urban Warrior event is a collaborative effort with the City of Monterey, the Monterey police and fire departments, the Naval Postgraduate School and the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center and the Presidio of Monterey. Elements of the city's police and fire departments, and other emergency responders, will participate in a disaster relief operation during the exercise and provide communications connectivity, traffic control and safety assistance throughout the event. All events will take place during daylight hours.

During the exercise, Monterey will serve as a city in a fictional, sovereign international country that has requested support from the United States. The Special Purpose Marine Air-Ground Task Force (Experimental), located aboard an off-shore amphibious ready group will land Marines to help stabilize the situation and search for individuals who may be manufacturing a simulated biological weapon of mass destruction. This force will be reinforced by the Chemical-Biological Incident Response Force, a Marine unit from Camp Lejeune, N.C., created specifically to respond to the threat of chemical and biological weapons.

One part of the force will make an amphibious landing at the Naval Postgraduate School beach while the other will make a helicopter landing at the Presidio of Monterey. In these scenarios, the Marines will encounter about 300 role-players acting as civilians and threat forces.

Following the exercise, Marines will conduct joint training with local disaster relief first responders.

For more information, call the event phone bank at 656-1077, 656-1078 or 656-1079. Use the 656-1079 if you need to leave a message.

Army announces new fraternization policy

By Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey
Army News Service

A new Army policy on fraternization takes effect today, giving officers and enlisted soldiers who are now dating one year to marry or end their relationship.

The new "good order and discipline" policy revises Army Regulation 600-20. Besides restricting personal relationships between soldiers of different ranks, it also limits private business deals between officers and enlisted soldiers. While the policy does not prohibit transactions such as selling a car or renting a house, it does restrict the lending of money or entering into long-term business partnerships. Business relationships, which were allowed under the old policy, are exempt until March 1, 2000.

Secretary of Defense William Cohen directed in July 1998 that all services align their fraternization policies. The Army's "Good Order and Discipline Policy" is a direct result of that directive, officials said, and not only applies to relationships between soldiers, but also relations of Army personnel with service members in other branches.

Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, Patrick T. Henry, said the new policy reflects the need for the military services to have standard policies because of the increasingly joint character of modern military missions.

The policy immediately prohibits officers and enlisted soldiers from beginning any new romantic relationship. However, if the relationship existed prior to March 1, officials said the soldiers have until March 1, 2000 to get married, break up or face the consequences.

The policy also prohibits relationships between permanent-party soldiers and initial-entry trainees, whether stationed on the same post or not. It prohibits romantic relationships between recruiters and potential recruits, without regard to where the applicants live or where the service member is stationed.

In fact, the new policy prohibits any relationship between soldiers of different ranks if the relationship appears to compromise supervisory authority, or could result in impartial treatment. Relationships are prohibited if they appear to involve the improper use of rank or position for personal gain. Relationships are also forbidden if they will have an adverse impact on unit morale or the ability of a command to accomplish its mission.

Officials said the new policy is not intended to preclude normal team building such as community organizations, family gatherings, unit-based social functions or in any way limit athletic competition. Unit-based social functions include picnics, hails and farewells, right arm night and bring your boss night.

"I want to stress that the Army has always emphasized the importance of sound professional interpersonal relationships to the success of Army missions," Henry said. "The nature and structure of our Army demands that officers and enlisted work together in teams and units under trying circumstances. Unit cohesion is essential to build the confidence and trust necessary for units to fight and win on the battlefield. Good, professional leadership and common sense will make these new policies work for the good of the Army," he said.

Relationships between Reserve Component members are exempt from the new policy if the relationships are primarily based on civilian acquaintanceships. Personal relations between Regular Army and Reserve component soldiers are also allowed, with the same stipulation. However, officers and enlisted soldiers cannot date if either are on active-duty tours or serving in full-time Guard or Reserve positions.

The new policy gives commanders at company-level authority to prohibit relationships that compromise or appear to compromise the integrity of authority or the chain of command.

Air Force publishes 1999 quality-of-life focus paper

The 1999 Air Force Quality of Life focus paper has been approved by Acting Secretary of the Air Force Whit Peters and Chief of Staff Gen. Michael Ryan. The theme of this year's paper is again, "People."

Field leaders were surveyed for their opinions on what quality-of-life factors are having the most impact on readiness and retention in their units. Major commands, unit commanders and first sergeants responded by revalidating the seven areas the Air Force has been concentrating on for the last several years:

- Pursue fair and competitive compensation and benefits;
- Balance the impact of high tempo levels;
- Provide access to quality health care;
- Provide access to safe, affordable and adequate housing;
- Maximize retirement systems and benefits;
- Increase and enhance support to community and family programs; and
- Expand educational opportunities and access.

The degree of emphasis placed on each area has varied over time with retirement, compensation and tempo gaining prominence the last couple of years. This year's focus paper conveys the Air Force strategy for supporting all seven quality of life priorities, highlighting key initiatives and issues associated with each.

The 1999 quality-of-life focus paper can be found on the Air Force quality-of-life home page at <http://www.dp.hq.af.mil/DP/afqol/QOL.HTM>. (Courtesy of Air Force News Service)

New program will identify 'high potential' recruits with GEDs to aid Army recruiting

By Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

After missing this fiscal year's first-quarter recruiting goal by 2,300 soldiers, the Army is taking a look at accepting more recruits with high school equivalency degrees.

"This notion that quality is defined by being a high school diploma graduate has put us in a box that is really hurting our ability to recruit," Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera said. The Army has many fine soldiers now with GEDs, Caldera said, explaining that young people with GEDs shouldn't be barred from military service if they can demonstrate the "desire and the ability to be successful."

Caldera has directed Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs Patrick Henry to develop a pilot program to look at recruits with GEDs. Henry said the program will study ways "high potential" GED holders might be identified.

The pilot program will not be a "quick fix" for recruiting shortfalls, officials said, but is instead designed to provide benefits for the Army years into the future. "The Army is committed to recruiting and maintaining a quality force," Henry said.

"Earning a GED should not preclude otherwise qualified and motivated young men and women from serving our nation in uniform," Henry said. "They have taken the initiative to earn a recognized high school equivalency, and that initiative can translate into success in the Army."

A small task force under Henry is trying to isolate attributes, qualifications and skills that will identify those potential recruits with GEDs who are most likely to be successful in the Army, an official said. Life experience such as jobs, scouting, and volunteer work may be taken into account, he said, to see if these play a significant factor in demonstrating one's potential for retention.

The task force may also look at other research, he said, such as a study being conducted now by the Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences.

ARI developed a test to measure motivation among recruits. Called the Assessment of Individual Motivation, or AIM, the test has been administered to about 20,000 recruits so far. About 2,000 of these recruits have GEDs, researchers said.

Some researchers envision the AIM eventually being used to help screen potential recruits. The test results might be combined with other criteria and experience, officials said, to help identify those candidates who are highly motivated and likely to succeed in the Army. Under a current Department of Defense policy, no more than 10 percent of recruits can be GED holders. Officials said if the Army wants to accept more than 10 percent, Caldera would request relief from DOD regulatory restrictions.

Last month, recruiting more GED holders was a topic of discussion at the Army's first Hispanic Leadership Summit held Jan. 13 in San Antonio, Texas.

Participants at the summit included Congressmen Ciro Rodriguez and Charlie Gonzalez, both of Texas; and Gil Coronado, director of the Selective Service System. Coronado dropped out of school at age 15 and joined the military. He later went on to receive a GED and retired from the service as a colonel.

"The military opened more doors in my life than I ever thought existed," Coronado said.

Coronado explained that the military "provides a level playing field in which you meet people from walks of life that you might never have been able to meet were it not for the military. It's truly one of the best experiences a young person can have for laying a successful foundation to his or her life," he said.

Rodriguez, who represents the San Antonio district, said that research has identified seven reasons why students drop out of high school. "One of those is academic," Rodriguez said. "The other six are not."

Rodriguez said that many Hispanic students drop out of high school to help support their families. He said that that these young people deserve an opportunity to enlist in the Army.

"I think that the Army is an institution that should not write off people in America who need a second chance," Caldera said.

A number of the Army's top NCOs have been GED holders, according to Army personnel officials, saying those ranks include two former sergeant majors of the Army. One example of a GED holder who achieved success in the Army was Medal of Honor recipient Louis Rocco. He dropped out of high school, later earned a GED, and went on to earn an associate's degree from the University of Baylor while in the Army. He also was commissioned a warrant officer before leaving the Army. He now works as a counseling therapist at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in San Antonio.

As a sergeant first class, Rocco earned the Medal of Honor in Vietnam in 1970 for carrying eight injured soldiers across 20 meters of exposed terrain under fire. He did this despite having a broken wrist, fractured hip and severely burned hands suffered moments earlier when his helicopter was shot down on the way to pick up the wounded.

"You don't have to have a diploma to serve your country and perform an act of valor above and beyond," Rocco said.
